Tools for the Cattleman

New products designed to serve the producer.

A new year brings about new resolutions and goals. This month's new products are the perfect tools for cattlemen to add to their toolbox. The equipment featured can help increase productivity and efficiency, keeping cattle and their handlers safe while still helping to turn a profit.

Strip-till

With the end of October, John Deere offered a new series of strip-till equipment, including a pair of integral models and three drawn models to match dry fertilizer or anhydrous applications.

The new units offer farmers the opportunity to combine nutrient application and tillage into a single, efficient field pass. This has the potential to reduce the need for multiple trips across the field.

“Strip-till can improve soil health, reduce erosion and conserve soil moisture,” says Ryan Jardon, marketing manager for John Deere. “Strip-till has been shown to help farmers reduce input costs while maintaining yields and further maximizing their profitability. These new strip-till units give farmers the ability to prepare their seedbeds in the fall, so they’re ready to plant in the spring.”

The series features the John Deere ST12 and ST16 Integral or the ST12, ST16 and ST18 drawn models that come from the factory ready to work in a variety of soil and field conditions.

No matter the farmer's choice, all models are heavy-built and equipped with a variety of shanks, coulters and row-spacings. Individuals can essentially customize the equipment so it best fits their field conditions and fertilizer needs. In-cab row adjustments are also available.

Models available in 12, 16 or 18 rows come with tanks with a 10-ton dry fertilizer capacity and scales. The ST12 and ST16 are available on 30-inch spacing, while the ST18 is available on 20- or 22-inch spacing.

Hydraulic chute

Mid-November, Arrowquip introduced its new heavy-duty hydraulic chute, the Colonel. The hardworking cattle chute offers the perfect piece of equipment for feedlots and cattle operations.

The Colonel is a part of the company's Army Series, which also features the General and the Major.

This particular chute is engineered with easy-to-replace parts that ship in as little as 24 hours. With its rubber floor and traction kit, swing-out emergency exit on both sides, hydraulic neck extenders, and seven drop-down access panels, this is a piece of equipment made to help the producer.

It's designed to be easy to use and safe for both the animal and the handler. Arrowquip hopes the chute will help producers achieve maximum performance and efficiency.
