

Getting Settled

► A semitrailer full of Angus cattle is unloaded at the NJAS. Many families shared the cost of shipping by trailering cattle together or by the semi load.

► Truck-and-trailer rigs flood the Wisconsin State Fair Park in Milwaukee, Wis., during the 2002 National Junior Angus Show. Cattle were trailered in from coast to coast for the weeklong event.

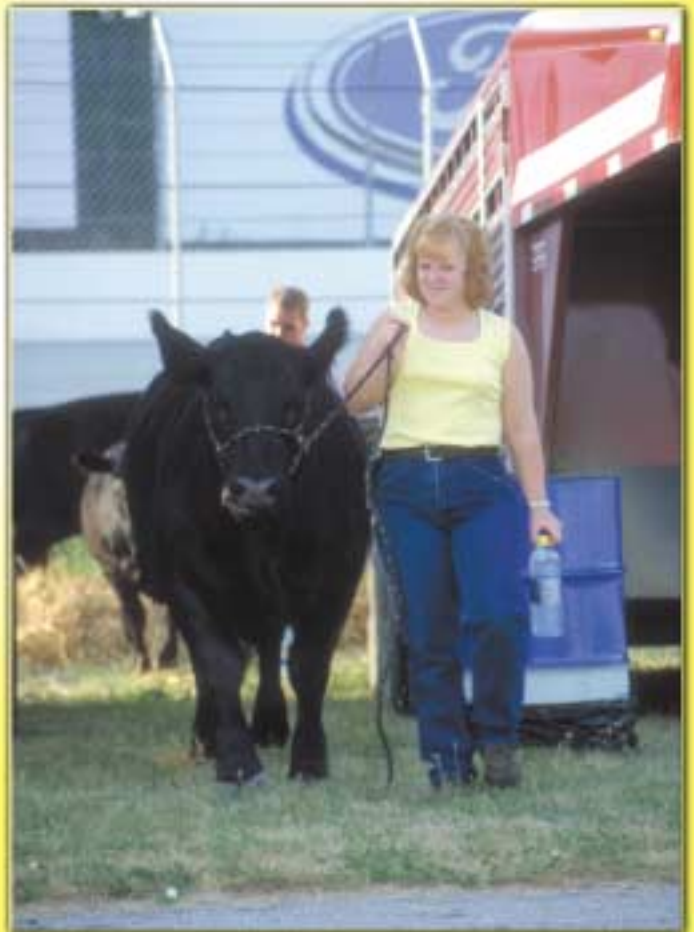

► Juniors and their parents spread straw so they could tie their animals out overnight. Tie-outs were especially crowded this year, with 950 animals entered in the show.

► Angus cattle stand tied on the curve of the Milwaukee Mile racetrack at the Wisconsin State Fair Park. Black cattle circled the racetrack while trucks and trailers were parked on the infield.

► Juniors greeted the sun each morning by bringing their animals to the barns to get them ready for the show.

► A cow-calf pair rests in the tie-out area. Cattle were brought from the barns each night to rest on the soft straw and grass.

► The daily chore of rinsing cattle didn't end when the juniors made it to Milwaukee. The washracks were full, starting in the early morning, throughout the show.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 142