

► Newly elected National Junior Angus Association Board members (from left) Amy Wolfrey, White Post, Va.; Jamie King, Tiffin, Ohio; Trever Kuipers, Onarga, Ill.; and Jennifer Beck, Louisburg, N.C., discuss their parts in vespers Friday evening. Vespers was an opportunity for new Board members to share a motivational quote or story.

to Success

Leaders Engaged in Angus Development conference offers National Junior Angus Association members a learning experience.

Photo story by Courtney Wimmer

▶ Terry Cotton, Angus Productions Inc. (API) general manager, tells participants about the history of API and the importance of communication. "Communicating is just something you do. It's something we have to do to be successful in what we do and in life," Cotton says.

ly McCurry (left) and Jeana Sankey enjoy dinner Thursday evening. LEAD conference was an opportunity for juniors to reunite with old friends and make new ones.

► Above: Imitating a Hereford cow, Mercedes Danekas, NJAA Board chairman from Wilton, Calif., acts out her part in "The Angus Hunter" skit. Junior Board members wore outrageous costumes and acted out the skit to end Thursday's activities.

► Left: Lacey Robinson (left), NJAA Board leadership director from Montgomery City, Mo., and Lana Myers, NJAA Board vice chairman from Jennings, La., play the parts of Salers and Brahman cows in the junior Board skit.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 86

'On the Rail to Success' CONTINUED FROM PAGE 85

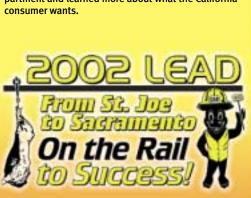

▶ James Fisher (left), American Angus Association director of activities and junior activities, watches John McCurry, NJAA Board membership director from Burrton, Kan., check off names as juniors load buses for tours Friday morning. Participants toured a supermarket, two ranches and a minor league baseball stadium.

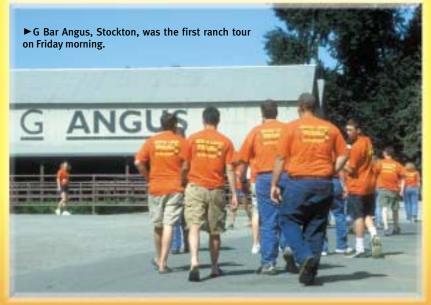

▶ Doug McHenry (right), director of meat operations, discusses why Raley's carries Certified Angus Beef ® products. "The reason we like CAB is the quality of the product," McHenry says.

► A worker in Raley's meat department packages hamburger. LEAD participants toured the meat department and learned more about what the California consumer wants.

► Tank, a 1-year-old Labrador, retrieves a training decoy from the pond at G Bar Angus. The pond was specially designed to train dogs for duck hunting.

Standing in a cherry orchard, participants gained some insight into the cherry business. G Bar brings in 500-600 hives of bees each year to pollinate the 100 acres of cherry trees.

► Right: Heather Kalino (standing), superintendent of livestock and equine events at the California State Expo, discusses ethics in the showring and DNA testing.

► Abbie Nelson (right), Five Star Land and Livestock, Wilton, visits with juniors as they go through the buffet line. Five Star hosted lunch and workshops Friday afternoon.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 88

'On the Rail to Success' CONTINUED FROM PAGE 87

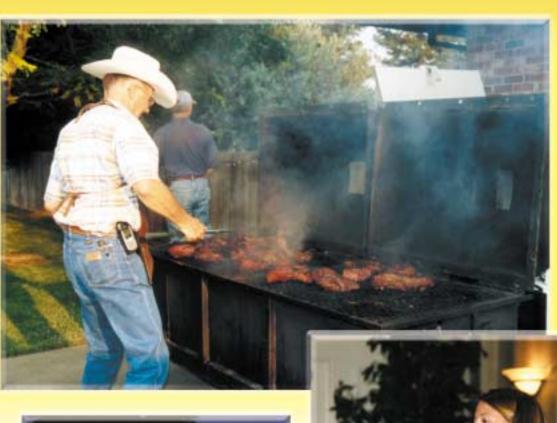

► "Often you learn more from losing than from winning," says John Dickinson, American Angus Association regional manager. Dickinson helped junior members define success during his workshop Saturday morning.

▶ Tabitha Golden, Mena, Ark.; Kathy Wilson, Orleans, Ind.; and other members of the group discuss how to make a symbol of leadership from Play-Doh during Scott Vernon's workshop. Groups designed symbols including smiley faces, a Superman symbol, a heart, a chain and a gavel.

► Left: A dinner and dance were held Saturday evening at Pheasant Trek Angus, Wilton. Conference participants were treated to tri-tip CAB steaks and strawberry shortcake.

► Below: Clairessa Humphrey, Ozark, Ark., sings during the morning devotional on Sunday. Holly Bellis, Orrick, Mo., also sang a solo.

► Above: A bull at Pheasant Trek Angus plays with fire Saturday evening.

► Right: LEAD participants serenade Zach Kinne, Eagleville, Mo., with "You are My Sunshine." Kinne turned 16 years old on the final day of the conference.