Ag values

Growing up in a small rural community, I was surrounded by people who willingly gave of their time, money and energy. My mom was a 4-H leader, church worship leader and hosted midnight breakfasts after the homecoming dance for local high school students. Dad served on the local school board and during the summers, he and my little brothers mowed the lawn at the church. At a young age my siblings and I were reminded to “bring our quarters” for the weekly offering at church. In high school, we signed up for various committees such as prom decorating, community cleanup and blood-drive promotion. Hard work and volunteerism was expected and needed in our small town of White City, Kan.

Setting an example

Meghan Blythe

As I headed to college four years ago, I was unaware of my unique small-town upbringing, but I soon began to realize that these beliefs of unselfishness were not universal. It was in these situations of temptation and challenge that my beliefs became actions and were solidified into values.

Transitioning from a small town to a large campus was intimidating. At times, it seemed like my actions were not making a difference and that my values were in the minority. I found encouragement and pride in a recent study funded by the beef checkoff. “The Cattlemen’s Stewardship Review” looks at the beef industry’s influence on communities, the economy, public health and the environment.

What this study found was that cattlemen

Nearly half (47%) of cattlemen volunteer with youth organizations, and more than one-third (35%) volunteer with other community organizations as compared to the national average of 7%.

tend to be more involved and more patriotic than the average American. Nearly half (47%) of cattlemen volunteer with youth organizations, and more than one-third (35%) volunteer with other community organizations as compared to the national average of 7%. A large majority of cattlemen (84%) contribute to their local church, and nearly one-fourth have served in the military, as opposed to the national average of 14%. Additionally, nearly all (94%) cattlemen vote in local, state and national elections, compared to 14% of the general population.

These statistics made me proud of my values and upbringing. Through my involvement in the National Junior Angus Association and travels across the country, I have found the same dedication of White City in the people of the Angus community. It is this passion as an individual and as a family to invest in something bigger than themselves that links us to history and generations before us, and it is this dedication that will lead us into the future as we work together to feed the world.

— Meghan Blythe, Kansas

The deadline for the Accelerated Genetics annual photo contest is quickly approaching. Every year a panel of judges selects photos that portray Accelerated Genetics and agriculture from two different categories. This year’s two new categories are: “Accelerated Genetics in Action” and “Breeds of the Seasons.”

For the “AG in Action” theme, capture your favorite Accelerated Genetics cattle, products, services, representatives, etc., as they are showcased around the farm, focusing on people, products and pride in the agriculture industry. For the “Breeds of the Seasons” category, snap photos of your favorite breeds while showcasing your favorite seasons.

There will be awards for the top three places in each photo category. These awards include a first-place $100 gift card, a second-place $75 gift card and a third-place $50 gift card. Digital photos are required and need to be sent as a high-resolution (300 dpi) JPEG image with a photo size of at least 8×10 inches. Low-resolution photos will not be allowed in the contest.

The entry deadline for the contest is Sept. 1, 2013. Contestants are allowed to enter as many photos as they wish. Each photo entered must list: name of photographer, address, phone, email, the location the photo was taken, a photo title and one of the two photo categories. All photos can be emailed to Angie Lindloff at alindloff@accelgen.com with the subject title, “2013 Photo Contest,” or sent by mail as prints or on a CD to Accelerated Genetics, Angie Lindloff — Photo Contest, E10890 Penny Lane, Baraboo, WI 53913.

Twenty Kansas high school students — including National Junior Angus Association member Casey Craver, Saline, Kan. — participated in the 5th annual K-State Animal Sciences Leadership Academy June 5-8 at Kansas State University's (K-State) Manhattan campus. In addition to sessions and tours on campus, participants toured livestock-related organizations and businesses in other parts of the state.

The students, who ranged in age from 14 to 18, were selected based on educational, community, and agricultural involvement. As part of the academy, they evaluated real-life livestock situations and became familiar with college life.

NJAA members, including K-State students John Sachse, a senior in animal sciences and industry from Easton, Kan.; and Tyler Ottensmeier, a senior in animal sciences from McLouth, Kan., also served as counselors

Prior to the academy, participants were given a current-event topic to research. Each gave a presentation at the end of the week on such topics as use of swine gestation crates; U.S. horse slaughter; use of anesthesia for minor farm animal surgeries; and beef steroid implants. The presentations were evaluated and scored based on content, delivery, knowledge of the topic and ability to answer questions.

"The academy was a great success and I was so proud to lead such a great group of young individuals," Kristine Clowers, youth livestock coordinator, said, adding that the academy drew more than 40 applications. "Their enthusiasm and drive to make a difference in the industry is inspiring, and I encourage them to spread their dedication."

As part of the academy, the group toured Mill Brae Ranch near Maple Hill; the Kansas Livestock Association and Kansas Beef Council, both in Topeka; and Seaboard Foods in Shawnee Mission before having dinner in the Kansas City area.

Back in Manhattan, the students toured the K-State Department of Animal Sciences and its farm units, the K-State Animal Breeding Services Unit, and the Beef Cattle Institute.

"The purpose of touring these organizations is to give the participants a glance at where their future could possibly lie after high school and/or college graduation," Clowers said. "Youth are not always aware of the different avenues they can take in the livestock industry and by seeing firsthand what these companies and organizations do, they can broaden their future plans and goals."
