The glass house

"The only the person you should be chasing is the person you were yesterday."

Be an example

Through the course of my life I have always been under the impression that I should be chasing something bigger than myself, rather than channeling all of my energy to constantly devote myself to personal growth. I have found that enabling myself for personal growth has a far greater benefit to myself and those around me.

Reese Tuckwiller

Growing up I can remember many great role models that I had inside and outside the cattle industry. In the fast-paced world we live in, it is easy to look past the fact that someone is always watching. It is extremely important to carry yourself in a way that teaches others to empower themselves and those around them. As I have gotten older and gained more life experience, I realize just how important it is to be the role model for the next generation. With that being said, the way you carry yourself, treat others and handle difficult situations has a far greater benefit to others than the information or God-given abilities you possess.

Setting boundaries in both ability and responsibility helped me develop into the person I am today. Understanding my strengths and weaknesses, acknowledging my shortcomings and asking others for help have given me the foresight to understand how to carry myself in day-to-day activities and/or in a professional setting. This demonstrates to the people around me a greater understanding of the transparency that you need to have in everyday life to achieve a common goal.

Summer is here! This is one of my favorite times of the year on the farm and at Angus events nationwide. Just remember this is a time to have fun; however, go the extra mile to do all the little things with a sense of pride, because you never know who is watching. Yes, the winning is awesome but the lessons of hard work, determination and never giving up on your goals is a far richer life lesson.
