Rennylea Angus: A look into an Australian Angus ranch

Every year the Australian Collegiate Meats Judging Team invites a U.S. team to compete in their contest in Wagga Wagga, New South Wales, in July. This spring, my meats judging team at Oklahoma State University received the news that we were headed to the Land Down Under. Eleven of us, including eight team members and three coaches, flew out of Los Angeles on a 14-hour flight Saturday, June 27. We landed in Sydney June 29, and that day we started our journey southwest towards Albury. On our way there we made a stop in the South West Slopes to visit Rennylea Angus.

Focus on advancement

Rennylea is a 3,000-head operation with 1,200 record cows on almost 7,000 acres.

Macy Perry

The ranch has been in the Corrigan family since 1868, where it originally started as a sheep operation. It is currently operated by Bryan and Lucinda Corrigan and family. Rennylea has been a commercial cattle operation since 1952.

Bryan remains focused on balancing "free traits" and "cost traits." Free traits include temperament, fertility, structural soundness, calving ease and marbling. Cost traits refer to milk, muscle, fat, growth and yield. Rennylea strives to provide elite genetics that lead to a quality product for the customer, resulting in high profitability for the ranch. Rennylea accomplishes this vision by optimum performance, an efficient cow herd that is functional and fertile, and meeting top market specifications.

Rennylea has been utilizing artificial insemination (AI) since 1974. The ranch also includes the use of embryo transfer (ET) in the cow herd with an 85% pregnancy rate, achieving an average between 300 and 400 ET calves born every year. Rennylea hosts two bull sales a year in March and August where they market a total of 500 bulls. Rennylea also contracts their bulls, leases them for four years or sells by private treaty. However, before selling their bulls, Rennylea makes sure they are tested for structural and reproductive soundness.

Rennylea aims for an end product that will be of the highest quality for their customers. They strive for a top 5% eye muscle area, positive fat cover and a positive percentage of intramuscular fat. Rennylea's Angus cattle are finished on both grain and grass and are able to regularly market at a carcass weight of 620-660 pounds (lb.) when finished on grass.

In 2004, Rennylea was the first beef business in Australia to host a video sale. Video sales are now very common in Australia, and Rennylea continues to use the system. Rennylea also stays ahead of the industry by the recent implementation of a DNA genotyping system. They will then be able to use phenotypes and genotypes to produce more accurate estimated breeding values (EBVs). By doing this, Rennylea will be able to locate superior animals within the herd earlier and with better accuracy.

As an Angus producer in the United States, it was an amazing experience to see how the breed performs across the world. Rennylea is a leading Angus operation in Australia, and I expect them to continue leading their industry for years to come.

Bryan notes, "For Rennylea, our real point of difference is developing a seedstock herd in a high-profit production system and understanding how genetics and EBVs are designed to fit that system. We produce carcass and fertility Angus genetics that are second-to-none in the Australian industry."

NJAA announces new age rule for competition

Eight-year-old members of the National Junior Angus Association (NJAA) are now eligible to show at Angus-sponsored competitions across the country. The new age rule, approved by the American Angus Association Board of Directors and the National Junior Angus Board (NJAB), takes effect Jan. 1, 2016.

"The recent change to age requirements will allow Angus juniors who are 8 years old on Jan. 1 to be eligible to compete at our nationwide shows," says Jaclyn Clark, Association director of events and education.

The NJAA sponsored more than 50

junior shows during the past year, involving nearly 5,000 Angus youth. According to the new rule, an exhibitor's birth date must fall between Jan. 1, 1995, and Dec. 31, 2007, to compete and be either a junior, regular or life member of the American Angus Association.

However, the Association cannot guarantee this will occur at all upcoming events, depending on planning stages of the shows. If you have questions, contact the show office directly.

For a complete listing of upcoming shows and events, entry deadlines and requirements, visit www.angus.org or contact the Association's events and education department by calling 816-383-5100.

Stockmen's Foundation names scholarship recipients

for the Long Haul," Sept. 26 in Bismarck, N D

The NDSF awarded a $500 Legacy scholarship to NJAA member Renae Tokach of Saint Anthony.

Tokach is the daughter of Richard and Kathy Tokach. In her time at Kansas State University, she was involved in the Block and Bridle club, the Collegiate CattleWomen, Sigma Alpha Professional Agriculture Sorority, Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow and the College of Agriculture Student Council. In her junior year, Tokach is majoring in animal sciences and agricultural communications at North Dakota State University (NDSU). After graduation, she plans to pursue a career in agricultural communications with a livestock organization or agribusiness.

The NDSF is offering scholarships again in 2016. For more information visit www.ndstockmen.org. The scholarship application deadline is March 1.

The NDSF was established in 2008 to support beef-related research, education, promotion, building and leadership objectives in North Dakota.
